Summary: A way to look at life's ups and downs as movements of a rock

To begin with we all start from a big rock being God, as all energy in the universe is and maintained by God.

So to begin with as you fall from being part of the mountain side, you are a rock and one obstacle as you first become part of the ocean.

Most of that is to shape you, for as the rock smashes free of the other rocks, it will break it or become more smooth.

You see with no control of where life might take us, we are very much like a rock being moved around by other rocks and where the tides take us. The skill and why the rock moves and how to learn to develop as a pebble would; whilst some just become sand. The tide is there to help you, though it may not seem so; it is down to the rock to move. You see when a wave comes and you are aware that it was coming, you can move in advance of it, so on the next push it goes that way you need.

Yet for many of us with current media helping to develop sand and not pebbles, the help, well that is unless you realize that is also part of the tide and there is a way you need to be, to perfect the art of pebble making.

With everything that happens in your life, it is like rocks smashing or rubbing together. You understand where and why the bounce happened each time and what was the result. You can learn to adept from these.

So rather than carry a big chip on your shoulder which is easier to see and feel, you are the pieces and continue as a whole rock.

Many of us forget that we are always the rock and that really we can move in any other way around; yet as I said earlier current media is trying to make us sand. Each one of us has the ability through being a stable rock to others to hold onto, which is that is easier to float along in.

Yet when we are already being classed as sand and having not based our lives on rock, with, we have confused our selves.

You see you can not stop being, just what you end up as, is all down to the tide. So if someone bumps you, ask your self where and why they have done that and help them back to help guide them on to the track they are meant to be on; not to be.

Yet In all of this be aware of lava, lava is when someone has gotten so hot from their experiences it has heated up the rock.

If you look at that in perspective of the ocean, you are pebble or semi pebble on the ocean bed, and you will see the winding and heat given off by said lava, the current.

Things start happening to you that wouldn't normally, now many of us try to fix them; we can't they have to fix them themselves.

You can give too much and often lose yourself in the process and all you have left is fire with more fuel to be burned.

You see the sea can cool them, being life, yet not if everyone is so busy trying to fix it is aggravating that rock even more; so heating it even more.

The best is to let them find it themselves, by being solid as a pebble you are. When you are broken stone all you do is cause more turmoil for yourself, as a pebble or rock and the water flow surrounding it (karma).

The end purpose of all of this is to one day end up on the beach as a smooth pebble. To get there requires not being broken into sand along the way.

So when we base our trust in sand as hopefully this now finishes, we will be left with a mountain of sand and the sea contains many of its pieces.

So when we declare all are lava to begin, it doesn't help any of us get a solid foundation. Our trust on the rock, we also learn it stands solid against the test of time by the ocean, yet instead moves it.

So this is where and what we should also, not to be broken at the first opportunity somewhere in the ocean; hoping no one else will steal the same space; you are just sort of showing, of course something will take the space. It is the way the next shapes the others.

So in trying to hide in a deeper hole than all the rest, when an obstacle comes hard, as if that pebble falls down that same hole you made for yourself, it will blind your way from moving on again, as all need to, to be able to continue in the ocean.

As is life and what this ocean is for, as who wants a load of broken pebbles? Attempts at making it across the ocean.

When on the other hand you have a group who are so determined to stay apart that haven't even remembered or realized they have left to begin with.

There are quite a few of us trying to fill up the broken bits with any chance we get; this doesn't work. As the sea is a harsh reality; anything that is not natural to the ocean, so it is no good trying to glue on broken bits and fill up the cracks.

The more you try and fill it, the further it takes you away from yourself. As each of them was to teach you to begin with, so if you try to tamper with it you end up as lava and get nowhere as in whom you are meant to be.

The only way to move on, is to understand that the bit broken happened to be in balance with the waves; so that slowly you understand most situations through the ocean bed and then one day make it to the beach as a pebble where you belong.
