Summary: If you have ever come to one of them moments you can't make something, maybe a closer look at what your soul is saying to you may h

With in any decision there are normally only a couple of options availabl it down that is; as some times we get so many ideas in our head that this simplicity of the question to begin with.

Lets say we have two points, one where we are to begin and then our des Now the destination is across country and mountainous terrain to get to A to B we have to choose a path.
We know the ruff direction we are heading, yet this twist and turns, plus still to be found.

So to begin with we start on the road, which leads us to the bottom of va the centre of the valley there maybe odd obstacles, such as trees and bu as the water always seeks the low ground and so has pushed most obstac valley.

Yet being our inquisitive self's, we find the road that has been presented with no real compass we need a way to give our self's a reference point So begin to climb up the mountain to see if it gets any easier, when we c So by climbing up the side of the mountain which looked easier from the growth on the mountain side then in the valley; yet on getting to the poin much harder as there are obstacles that can also take your life if you fal hill, we also must watch our step of where the water was falling into the and everything off the mountain side with it, so making non solid ground

So after getting to the top of the mountain, we can see all the surroundi that we were on the right track to begin with. Only problem now is there we now must go down again with all the obstacles and difficulties of goi

So once returning to the valley on our intended destination, we stayed li

As though we get to see where we are going, one things is very clear, wa neither should we.
As in almost any question when it is narrowed down to this same journey where we want to get too.
We see the different routes, yet often the mind gets so cluttered with ex doesn't think.

So this is what the journey is about, the question that presents its self c
