Summary: Defining a new universal system, that we already call Oneness

Theological Oneness

In many of the world's religions, Oneness is the ultimate goal; it is a definition of the essence of our reality. We all seek Oneness in many different ways; we want to find some sense of community. At a biological level, we create families so that we can reproduce a part of ourselves within that Oneness. People find unity in nature, from the connection to a Oneness within everything. There is a feeling that though we try to fill it with different activities, it doesn't fully make us One.

Religious Oneness

The many different religions around the world are all trying to describe the path to an ethical society, that can live together in harmony. The issue of religion is that we need to unite the concepts, and then look for a universal consensus where there is then a more moral social ethical system. There is no good system for each religious culture - as we're one world living together, we need policies globally, for us all not to offend each other.

Political Oneness

Currently the world has been taught that a republic is a democracy, and that it is for people to represent our thoughts on topics; the problem with this is, that it is individual away, making it that we feel we don't have a choice to affect our world. We have a grand sense of Oneness, by feeling that we're all involved in the process.

Scientific Oneness

We exist inside a system all made out of quantum physics, where we're all part of which means there is a Oneness amongst all of us. The Fibonacci sequence is the whole of reality: where a snail shell, a wave in the ocean, a galaxy spiral, and the Golden Spiral - showing that there is a central Source to all the mathematical patterns. Mathematical matrices - showing that our whole reality has mathematical patterns in different calculations in a Universal Symphony; we're all part of that same system. All exist within the same Oneness.
