David,

You have been in my heart for many days and I am so delighted to hear your reply. Yes indeed, Life is a journey. The missing pieces are what I am questioning whether we are truly doing enough with what we have been given. Without the greater picture all in place, I struggle with inner doubts. Am I? Do I serve in the highest of integrity?

The missing pieces also keep me upon my chosen path and keep me moving, challenging and discovering new thought and theories, while simultaneously working or serves me as I grow and expand my own thinking and find meaning.

I accept the challenge to dive into the ocean of unlimited possibilities. The story as it has unfolded. I accept the challenge to be more than I see. The Universe as we know it is limitless and forever changing, much as the ocean from moment to moment.

Science is expanding at a rapid rate and I would love to hear more about it. I apologize for I have not yet completed reading and pondering all of your work.

Until I have a deeper understanding of what you are actually proposing for the near future, I would say I do not necessarily agree with having to "redefine" that matter. Flexibility will be necessary, but loss of the authentic self in changing circumstances are indeed changing, the inner truth as I see it will have a more fully realized and accessed in ways our minds have yet to fully comprehend.

I look forward to a continuing dialogue...

Love and Light,
SuZyq
