Hi - interesting question.

Lets break it down a little.

There are 3 keywords - sin, worship and Sunday.

Firstly regards sin:-

I am not convinced that we should consider it sin and condemn ourselves not follow this doctrine or that Dogma. We are all God's children and I a label us as sinners no matter what we have or haven't done. We are what Occasionally our actions may be considered sinful when they go against from the spiritual path towards God. But whether or not something should IMO depend more on rationality than on whether this or that scripture is

Next we can look at worship:

In order for our minds to move closer and closer to God they should beco to Godliness. Since God is an infinite entity, we can infer that our minds to become more "Godly". So worship should include only those practises bring it closer to God.

Now what is Dogma? Dogma is a belief or idea that stops the mind from e periphery - i.e. that stops the mind from moving forwards in its march to no scope in worship for any dogmatic practises.

How often should we engage in activities that bring our minds closer to C would be all the time. However, we need to live in the world and support should set aside times when we can concentrate more fully on these prac

Third keyword:- Sunday

Sunday is an astronomical concept - sun day, as is Moon day (Monday). are there times according to Sun/Moon phases that are better for worship moon has a strong influence on the state of mind in relationship to worsh Moon (spring tides) I have found that the mind is less able to really conc yogic explanation for this in that the water and air factors in the body are gravitational pull and are drawn upwards in the body, disturbing the mind crime rates and incidences of disquiet in Mental asylums. But I have found dry-fasting just before the New and Full moon counteracts this effect. It days that the mind, undisturbed by the stomach, is able to concentrate o practises.

So I would say that there is some biological/atronomical reasons for wan certain days. However, thre does need to be some objective adjustment a say that a 5 day workweek and 2 day weekend is what humans can comfor short-term present situation. Therefore one of the non-work days should worship. I think it would be dogmatic to say it needs to be Sunday or Sat

Hopefully, in the future when our society progresses towards more God-c days would fall on the beneficial moon and sun phases to allow us to get

So, in short - it would be dogmatic to say it is a sin to worship on a Sun
