Philosophy lesson about "knowing"

What someone said to me today... "You don't know as much as you think "Anything I can so freely think about, I must know."

How can one not know as much as one thinks?

To make this all a bit more philosophically clear... knowing is not truth. to think more than you know... knowing is just knowledge... knowledge is make sense to think of knowledge you don't have? You can think of know it's still not more than you know, because you are THINKING of it. So... something that you do not know, period. Before you ever say that to som take the time to understand what it really means... because it doesn't ma as myself. So it appears as if you're just throwing it out there as a sayin your own thought. There's so much more potential in there. *points to the More correctly, it should be written as. "You only know as much as you t you think you know". Again, knowledge is not limited to truth. Knowledge can tell me a lie; that trucks have 6 wheels. Now, let's assume I have ne with me)... I have just been seeded with the knowledge that ALL trucks h knowldge are somewhat, to an extent, one and the same. Knowledge is N truth. Make sense... understand... please HUMANS!

Am I hot and bothered? Aren't we all allowed our 2 seconds of venting th
