Answer below: (between your post)

"ok. you are only accountable for what you know and an innocent baby cry except that it is hungry, hurting or in some other form of need."

But according to Christianity you just have one birth to follow God... The "hell" or...will have another chance by taking birth again... now this last christianity...So the baby will go to hell which is not what you explained

"Because we are accountable for what we know, may I ask this? You seem to have information that did not come to mind to me in the middle of the night so what are you doing?"

I am observing as detached as possible how the Drama of life unfolds according to the knowledge which I learned, sharing with others. Knowing that those who are getting "peace awards" or being killed, and knowing that either way more things are getting worse every year. Unsensible human beings are trashing the world "doing"?

"My whole point is that if the world would pool its knowledge and resources, the world could be solved."

That is exactly what every politician will tell you, not mentioning holy men like the like...the problem is that there is a big gap between saying it and acting about it?

I am not nearly as ignorant as you might have thought by my quick note. I am seeing everything either.

"The poor cow thing, well it is my personal belief that they are here for a purpose. It seems obvious you don't eat meat, there is at least one point that we will know that if there were a cow and a child in a burning barn, the child would be saved over the cow only if possible. You would act in the same manner. If you believe that, then that would be another discussion. "

The poor cow thing is the same episode as the poor human thing in a thin slice of life around your neighborhood... Being completely insensitive to suffering is wrong. Beliefs of who is most important don't matter, what matters is : are you seeing that it is a cow or a human being, can you see that? Do you feel mercy? Then something, which is not to spend a dime in meat, killing and suffering.. The world would help in the same way, then you wouldn't see the supply and demand. Nice wish. I decided to do something about it .. now is your turn...

"Tell me this, in what religion ( and I know it is either buddist or hindu) as different life forms? Doesn't this faith also teach levels of greatness. One creature and then another depending on how you led your previous life? Is a human more than a cow."

The belief in reincarnation is the "just" answer for the baby problem about (more time), souls take bodies. The soul in that baby will take another body. Humans take animals bodies. Humans have intellects to recognize who God is, but animals do not. However, animals have souls too. The body that you take goes according to your actions in your previous body. It's the law of karma.

"When you set up something to call holy it is idol worship. Does your god worship a cow over him? I'm not being a smart alec, I just want to know."

There is only one God. He is a soul just like you and me. However, He never died and didn't go into rebirth.

Therefore, He doesn't forget like we do. God tells us who we are: souls, bodies. He tells us that we were worshipers in time. The fruit of all this is knowledge. The knowledge of who He really is and the relationship that we have with Him is eternal.

Body consciousness is what lead us into the 5 vices which in turn separate us from and our true relationship with God.

"Please answer."

It was a pleasure.
