Living is philosophical, therefore everything we do is philosophical, it's way of living and/or thought is a philosophy. We are all walking, living and holding a different perception on/of reality. Thus the bee has a different perception of reality than you or me does. Now we enter the scary realm of questioning the very notion of philosophy? I would define it VERY VAGUELY as the ability to understand philosophies, whether it is the bee or the rose. Without existence all things in reality bring with them desires and needs, without these we have no philosophy in the universe a cold desolate place with no intelligent life of any type.(bee's, rose, all) We are now at peace and synchronicity with nature. This is how we see things only in naturalness without judgements and desires. Just see through eyes and ears. Philosophi-less? ;) perfect existence. Everything just is because it is. Let go. You know what I'm saying? To get the answers one desires, one must reword the problem and never stop until the page is blank. What is the problem? The question. If we delete the human perversions of the mind(want, need, desire for power), we get to where we desire. Can you view the world without the help of your mind and use only your eyes and ears? Do this for a while, take it all in, use your brain. You'll find your whole perception of reality changed. Ego is gone. Different outlooks, a strange new world... you may even experience anxiety and insecurity, but what do you expect without power and ego at your side? You love? Then Get over it.
