If there would be only one faith, then there would be no reason to argue argue right or wrong, good or evil, heaven or hell. Sounds very unitarian what my brother is. I am currently a member of the Assembly of God in S background is Presbyterian(can't spell that!), Baptist, Quaker, Methodist Church of God. So there are many doctrinal issues that I could argue with call every former pastor, reverend or whatever and have a very long heated differences just in the christian faith.

I didn't bother reading all the long comments just now but I will when I get commentary of my own.

I believe the one thing the devil loves is to cause confusion. He is the one of the names he holds. On the other hand the Word says that Jesus is Finisher of our faith.

Another thing is that why would the devil cause trouble for people who are They are not messing up his plans! So if somebody is Hindu and somebody they are not interfering with what the devil is doing. But if you notice, of God or more especially, Jesus, they are under constant persecution. underground places in many countries. and many are shot.

The biggest differences that cause quarreling among faiths are the name ignorance of people who blindly follow their leaders without researching the history of the reformation of the church. Martin Luther (not King) was that at that time, the church was very evil. The folks at the top were so they would not even allow the peasants to read or even own a bible. The lands ect... Martin Decided after much prayer and fasting, to translate the languages and to offer them to the people. Read the rest for yourself, it I'm saying it is foolish of anyone to just believe what they are taught. Do your own research. There is a book called "Evidence that demands a Ver atheists that tried to prove the bible wrong and discovered truth.

You see, faith doesn't cause arguments, religion does. Do we not fight mundane things that we do differently from each other? So and so, home sends their kids to private school and others go to public school. We can and bad about each of them until we are blue in the face. But the chance somebody else's mind are pretty slim.

All you need to know is this. Jesus said, "I Am the way the truth and the Father except by ME."

So, talk to Him about it.
