THE UNPRECEDENTED DIMMING OF BETELGEUSE From Villanova University, reported this week Betelgeuse has continued to dim. The red supergiant's light is now at a 25 year low, stoking speculation that the star could explode that explains the observed dimming. Astronomers are at least as likely. Betelgeuse might be blowing dust from its cool outer layers that dims its own light. Whatever is happening, say the researchers, "Betelgeuse should be closely watched."
